What are the most common Dallas medical mistakes?

When researchers from Johns Hopkins University came out with a report a few years ago that said medical errors were the third leading cause of death in the country, most people were shocked. While people knew that medical mistakes occurred, they did not know that approximately 250,000 deaths were caused by medical errors each year in the United States. That is an astounding number, but even that estimate may be low. Some researchers say that the number may be closer to 400,000 deaths caused by medical mistakes annually.

Keep in mind that those are just the deaths that occur due to medical mistakes. Many millions more are injured due to these errors and are left dealing with the consequences.

With many prominent and well-known medical facilities in and around the Dallas area, it is important to look at the most common medical mistakes that occur:

- Errors with prescription medications (wrong medication, wrong dosage, not giving medication at all).
- Inadequate information flow between healthcare providers.
- Mistakes made during surgical procedures.
- Inadequate policies in place to prevent the spread of infections in a health care setting.
- A misdiagnosis or a missed diagnosis.
- Failure to treat a patient's condition.
- Delayed treatment for an injury or illness.

Healthcare professionals and the standard of care

When there has been a relationship established between a medical professional and a patient, then the medical professional owes a certain standard of care to the patient. Medical professionals owe the level of skill, expertise, and care that another adequately trained healthcare professional would provide in the same situation.

If it has been determined that a medical professional failed to provide an adequate standard of care to a patient, this could constitute medical negligence, resulting in liability for any patient harm that occurred paid
